Oprah's Angels: 65 Families, One Big Storm, And The American Dream (Kindle Single)

Synopsis

At the edge of Houston sits a community like no other: 65 petite, pastel houses inhabited by survivors of Hurricane Katrina and built by one of the most famous people in the world, Oprah Winfrey. The community, funded with $10 million of Oprah's money just a few months after Katrina, is made up of 65 families picked by nonprofit Habitat for Humanity. All pay around $400 a month in mortgage to live there. The houses are nearly identical. Their furnishings were selected by Nate Berkus, and paid for by Oprah's television sponsors. Angel Lane is not only a place, but an idea. It's the idea that people like Lynell McFarland, a fifty-four-year-old nursing assistant, could find better work and a better life for her daughter outside New Orleans; that people like Coleen Walters could overcome the loss of her husband and home through the construction of a new one. Angel Lane is the embodiment of a theory that tragedy — like the systemic urban poverty of New Orleans, and the destruction caused by Hurricane Katrina — can be turned into opportunity, that lemons can be made into lemonade. For the last ten years, the 65 families of Angel Lane have been living proof of this idea, and proof of its severe limitations. In OPRAH'S ANGELS, on the tenth anniversary of Hurricane Katrina, reporter Peter Moskowitz brings us into the homes of the residents of Angel Lane who have settled in Houston to find better jobs, less crime, and a new sense of identity. But the people living here also live with Katrina's continued wake — they have mental anguish, resentment over how the U.S. government treated them, and questions about what life could have been like were it not for the man-made failures that allowed Katrina to do so much damage. Mostly, they just miss home. Peter Moskowitz is a writer and journalist based in Brooklyn, New York. He's written for Al Jazeera America, The Guardian, Vice, Gawker, The New Republic, and many others. He's writing a book about gentrification in four U.S. cities: New York, San Francisco, Detroit and New Orleans. Cover design by Adil Dara.

Customer Reviews

Moszkowitz's story was compelling and well-researched. I highly recommend it. Totally worth the money. A decade after Katrina, I am glad pieces like this are examining the consequences of both the hurricane and the media/publicity surrounding it.

Good to here the rest of the story of the aftermath of Katrina.

This is a fascinating look-back on a feature of the Katrina debacle and its aftermath. Carefully researched and well written, this book is well worth reading. As the book description says: "At the edge of Houston sits a community like no other: 65 petite, pastel houses inhabited by survivors of Hurricane Katrina and built by one of the most famous people in the world, Oprah Winfrey. The community, funded with $10 million of Oprah's money just a few months after Katrina, is made up of 65 families picked by nonprofit Habitat for Humanity. All pay around $400 a month in mortgage to live there. The houses are nearly identical. Their furnishings were selected by Nate Berkus, and paid for by Oprah's television sponsors." I am looking forward to more books from this author.

I liked reading about some of the realities of post-Katrina, but the book ended very abruptly. Makes you think !

It was interesting but also a bit sad that the project was not carried through to fruition.

The author wanted to write a book about the terrible failures that occurred in the wake of hurricane Katrina. Unfortunately, he lacked the commitment to deep research and, instead relied on a catchy title to draw readers. Moszkowitz wasn't truly writing a book about Oprah or the residents of Angel

Lane, he simply used them both in order to gain an audience.

Author has a sour outlook and was disappointed that he couldn't find evidence to support his point of view.
